

THE TRANSATLANTIC PARTNERSHIP: AN EURO – AMERICAN DEBATE

*Vasile PUȘCAȘ

Abstract. The two societal communities (US and EU) waited, after the end of the Cold War, for a real shift in mentalities, attitudes and socio-economic statuses, including in the Euro-Atlantic space. The fall of ideological walls, political and communicational alike, was facilitated also by the new information and transport technologies, by the aspiration of achieving a strong bond between citizens, not just between politicians. The present study will present arguments for transatlantic cooperation and partnership, so that two entities will understand the new perspective for their own citizens and for the entire world.
